Inspiration, Aspiration, Preparation and Perspiration

Looking at the calendar for the remainder of Term One the thing that stands out is the number of assessments and examinations which are hovering within the last four weeks of term. As students navigate their way through this month they need to keep four concepts underpinning their actions.

A Year 12 student recently asked me how to remain focused on study and I answered that the way that I do it is to not focus on the minutiae of the now but to see beyond that to the broader and more important outcome. For example, I don’t focus on the paperwork but on the resources that it may garner for the development of the school and its students. I have always tried to encourage students to find something to inspire them to action in their studies. This should not be short sighted and myopic like a mark or a rank but should be substantial, lifelong and transcendent. Inspiration should be something that will make the hard work of now meaningful, purposeful and enduring. Inspiration can take many forms. It could be to emulate a respected person, to share in an experience such as university or travelling to another country, or it could be to fulfil a desire to practice a profession which will help others. Whatever it is, a target for oneself which is bigger and broader than the tasks at hand helps to alleviate the tedium and the stress and gives a sense of gestalt to our actions.

It is paramount that students also aspire to achieve personal goals throughout this time. It is just as important that these goals do not take the form of marks but manifest themselves as milestones of self-improvement or further understanding. A mark is simply an indicator of improvement or knowledge enhancement and is not a goal in itself. Academic aspirations need to be richer and deeper than simply marks. If students want the assessment tasks to mean anything they need to aspire to understand the knowledge itself and to push themselves for personal success. It is in this way that all students, including those who are fulfilling the criteria to the maximum, can continue to grow and develop as learners. If you aspire to a mark you can always fall short (sometimes for reasons out of your control), if you aspire to self-development and fulfilling your potential you will always be successful – even if what you learn is what not to do.

However big the ideas one subscribes to it is necessary to plan and prepare if they are to reach fruition. This does not mean just slavishly completing tasks ad nauseam, though practice is part of any good plan. Preparation includes, plotting study times, performing tasks, reading feedback, altering perceptions and ensuring that you are mentally ready for the task at hand. To ensure that all of these things are possible there needs to be a sensible approach to schoolwork and awareness that learning does not just take place within the confines of a classroom. Students need to maintain a balanced lifestyle. Study should be an important part of their life, not its entirety.

When all is said and done success requires perspiration. In the assessment task or the examination students need to work. They have to harness both the ideas which drive them and the skills taught at school to achieve to the best of their ability. Time is one of the most valuable commodities we have. If students have a definite reason for study and then plan effectively the time in the task may be used to exhibit their true skills and potential. Students need to be sure that each second is used wisely and with purpose in order to display, and develop, their true aptitude.

Finally it is important to note that all four of these elements have one thing in common. They all include the word ‘ration’. In some ways this is the most significant thing about them because you cannot truly reach your potential without having a modicum of all four. The student who works exceedingly hard with no meaningful purpose will be as likely to be as unfulfilled as the student who has pie in the sky ideas with no work ethic. To realise their full potential students need to apportion their energies between idealistic dreams, realistic goals, pragmatic plans and adroit execution.

[Please note, before anyone complains, I am aware that the root suffix of the four words is –ation (indicating an action, process, state, condition or result) and not –ration, I just decided to take a little poetic licence.)

Parent – Teacher Meet and Greet

On Thursday 27 March 2014, Hurlstone will be hosting two meet and greet sessions for our parents and guardians of year 7, year 11 and year 12 students. We are changing the dates and format of our parent teacher evenings so that the staff can provide parents and guardians information on how students are performing as well as how they can improve their learning and understanding prior to the half year examinations.

Year 7 Parents and Guardians – Edmondson Hall – 4 PM to 5 PM

Parents will be addressed by school staff in Edmondson Hall outlining student progress this term as well as providing information on how parents can assist their children in leading and supporting their education in a selective school. There will be an opportunity to meet with year 7 teaching staff at the conclusion of the presentation.

Year 11 and 12 Parents and Guardians – Edmondson Hall – 5:30 PM to 7 PM

Parents are invited to meet the teaching staff in Edmondson Hall. Parents and guardians will be able to talk about their child’s progress and how they can improve their learning and understanding in each subject. The meetings with staff should be kept to 5 minutes in length.

Any parent wishing to discuss their child’s progress in detail should contact the school to arrange an appointment with their child’s teacher.

Meet and Greet nights for year 8, year 9 and year 10 will be held in Term 2

Parents can help their child by having regular and meaningful conversations with them, by setting high aspirations and demonstrating and talking about their interest in learning at home and at school. Taking an active role in your child’s progress, both academically and socially will have a positive influence on their progress and development. Ensuring your child has enough sleep, a nutritious diet and plenty of physical activity will also aid in their success.
